Slack takeaway last week continued into this week, confirming that the buying round we saw in early August was likely a replenishment round after weeks of downward pressure on the both the lumber and panel markets. Reports have begun anew that there is some inventory build in the system.

Activity in most lumber species was muted. The exception early in the week was 2x4 SYP. OSB has gone from warm to cold as traders struggle to move contract loads once again. The market kicked into Labor Day mode by Thursday. The short upcoming week will tighten the availability of quick trucks to jobsites. The mornings are getting crisper, and the pigskins are ready to fly soon!
