Not much change in commodity markets this week, with slight adjustments on either side of the board in both lumber and panels. Mortgage rates continue to drop, and the Fed is most assuredly going to cut rates in the coming week. OSB remains mostly steady in price and demand, while southern panels continue a slow grind up again. For the short term, markets will remain muted, but the long term picture has most buyers cautious about getting caught in a run that has stronger demand on what is now lesser supply. It is going to hit us - we just aren't quite sure when. Temps are thankfully beginning to moderate, much needed in what has been a heavy fire season in the west. Happy hunting my friends.
